CARTOONISTS PITY LITTLE ELLSWORTH.

Never Thought Him Worth While Picturing in the Papers.

NOW THEY LOOK HIM UP.

How Some of Them See Him and His Bill to Punish Artists for Making Portraits.

THINK HE CRAVES NOTORIETY.

Opinions of the Leading New York Delineators of the Senator from Niagara and His Bid for Cheap Fame.

The cartoonists of this city seem to be more amused than aggrieved at the measure which Senator Elisworth, of Niagara, is trying to force through the Legislature. The Senator wants to have them fined $1,000 and imprisoned for one year for printing either a portrait or cartoon of any one without the written consent of the person so pictured.

The consensus of opinion of the New York artists seen yesterday is that the Senator has been so neglected by them in the past that he has determined, by virtue of his legislative bill, to compel their serious attention. That he has attracted their attention is evidenced by the car toons which appear on this page, and which express the artistic idea of who, what and where, is Senator Ellsworth. Frederick B. Opper, of Puck, said: "Most public men would rather miss eating than miss seeing themselves in print. I cannot think it possible that such a bill could pass. It is one of those chimerically absurd things that people cannot take seri

Leon Barritt said: "Most likely the Ser ator is seeking notoriety, and he has succeeded, but it will be merely temporary, for he will be cast into oblivion soon, as he is not apt to ever again attract atten-tion. A cartoon is nothing more nor less than an illustrated editorial. Cartoonists are as amenable to the libel laws as is a writer, and we all realize that fact. Such a law as the Senator proposes would probably be unconstitutional, anyhow, so what

at Albany."

As Reeso said: "If the Senator have his way it would be a simple for artists to draw public men, beir pens in New Jersey, or some wreign State. The pictures could be New York just the same without imprisonment for the offender. As or force, no writst would seriously Dragged Out of the Morgues. Albert Levering, said: "Few ever heard of Elisworth before, and I doubt if there of Ellsworth before, and I doubt if there is an artist in New York who ever saw his face until it was dragged out of the journalistic morgues to-day, because he had made a bid for notoriety with his fool bill. In a week's time he will be again hidden by the spray from the falls."

Louis Dalrymple, of Puck, said: "To prohibit cartoons is the same as to prohibit editorials, for both are the same, with the exception that the former can be read at a glance. A bill like that of Ellsworth's would imprison an artist for making a picture of even a criminal without first obtaining his permission. It would mean the picturing of a political convention by an architectural drawing of the building in which the meeting was held."

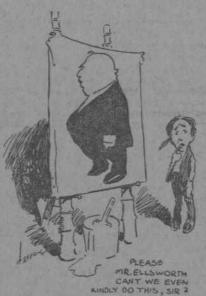

Tom McGill said: "It has long been so pronounced a case of frost and peach yellows to Ellsworth that he felt compelled, in justice to his constituents, to attrack attention. He has how done so, for the first time in his legislative career, and I presume that he, and everyone else, is perfectly satisfied."

Messrs. McMillin and Sulzer escorted Mr. Bryan to the House. They entered the east door and proceeded to the Democratic cloak room. In a minute more the news had spread and there was a scramble of members and employes to shake hands. Old, gray-headed men struggled with younger and more active ones to get near Mr. Bryan, and for fifteen minutes the cloak room was jammed.

A District of Columbia bill was before the House, and was being read when Mr. Bryan left the cloak room and stepped toward his old sont, now occupied by Representative W. F. Strowd, of North Carolina.

Stone, of Pennsylvania, was the first to reach him, and he was followed closely by General Grosvenor, of Ohio. For several minutes Mr. Bryan was kept busy greeting his Republican friends, and the page boys, who had crowded around with their autograph albums, stood a poor show. The confusion was so great that the reading clerk, who had resumed his duties, missed four or five lines of the bill he was reading and on complaint of udge Abbott, of Texas, had to begin over ngain. Speaker Reed, however, suffered all the confusion to go unchecked.
